Box 1561, Dublin, OH 43017

July 2016

When: 7 p.m., July 20
Where: Oakstone Academy
939 S. State St., Westerville
Speaker: Brad Karoleff
Topic: Connections

July presentation

Brad Karoleff holds a piece of the man-eating mountain.

My talk is based on an old TV show that I enjoyed called “Connections” by James Burke, a British science historian. The original series explored an alternative view on how new technological change happened and the social effects of the changes on western society. So, with apologies to Mr. Burke my talk is titled; “Connections, Black Pepper, The Mountain That Eats Men, and John Reich”.

I will be connecting the three subjects through historical contexts using numismatic illustrations. While not being a usual numismatic presentation, I will illustrate our trip through history using coins from my collection as well as others found on documented websites. Hopefully I will open the eyes of the attendees to the economic, political as well as the social reasons behind the coins we love to collect.

Come prepared for a lively hour of the stories behind some of the most popular coins ever issued in the world! - Brad Karoleff

June presentation

John R completed his three-year examination of the Seleucid empire coinage. Rulers of the empire, which lasted from 311 BC to 63 BC, didn’t tend to fare well. Only one died a natural death.

Romans finally executed the last two of these kings and brought the kingdom to an end in 63 BC with the death of Philip II Philoromios at the hands of Marc Anthony’s general Lucullus.

Rarest Columbus paper money

In early September 1816, the Columbus borough issued 120 75-cent notes, 464 25-cent notes, 836 12½-cent notes and 212 6¼-cent notes for a total of $555.75.

By May 24, 1819, the borough had redeemed $331.75 worth of the bills.

It is not know if all were eventually redeemed, but none are known to collectors.

If you have one, you've got quite a piece of history. Likely they are similar to the Griswold-Worthington notes.
